

Module 09

Before organization, my Netfiles was very cluttered. Most of it came from the alternative color schemes I created for my portfolio site. There were initially four alternate index pages, modules pages, and css templates just sitting in my web folder. There were also a few photos and icons I used that weren't sorted into the 'icons' and 'photos' folders I previously created. Finally, I had used netfiles to test a site I'm making for my roommate's business and had left the related files in my web folder. In summary, it was a mess. As I began to create my organization, I had to consider the content I would add to the site according to the syllabus. This content mostly falls under two categories: photos for my work page, and the actual work, resumé, and contact pages (.html files) themselves. I plan to place the photos under my photos folder, and leave the pages in the web folder.

To organize my netfiles, I first created individual folders for my alternate indexes & modules pages, and my alternative css sheets. I titled them altindexes, altmodules, and altcss, respectively. Then, I placed each page in its corresponding folder. Next, I created a bbc folder to handle all the content for my bbc mock website page. Then, I removed the files from the website I'm making for my roommate. I don't need them hosted anymore and should have removed them before. Finally, I sorted the loose photos into the photos folder, and the loose icons into the icons folder. Though the process was relatively simple, it removed a lot of clutter from my netfiles and made my server a lot easier to understand/work with. I probably would've waited to reorganize until the clutter became unbearable had it not been required for this module.
